Description: The Primary Immunodeficiency Disease Ontology Project is developing an ontology for the phenotypic description of Primary Immunodeficiency Diseases. The ontology can be used for integrative research in both biomedical and clinical research. Primary Immunodeficiency Diseases (PIDs) are Mendelian diseases, caused by defects or deletions of genes involved in the development, regulation and maintenance of the immune system. They usually affect newborns and toddlers, but can also manifest much later in life. Information about PIDs is often widely scattered across the research literature and a number of databases. PIDO is an attempt to develop both a machine- as well as a human-comprehensible representation of these diseases, starting with a phenotypic descriptions of disease.
