Description: NDRI's Human Tissue and Organs for Research Resource (HTORR) Program has been funded by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) for over 30 consecutive years to support research programs across multiple disciplines. It is through the HTORR program that NDRI provides academic biomedical investigators with donated normal and diseased human tissues and organs recovered from a diverse donor pool using customized procurement, processing, and preservation and distribution protocols. Our HTORR Program supports academic biomedical research investigators needs by providing: Access to a wide array of human biospecimens from any body system * Customized procurement in a variety of preservation formats including fresh, frozen, and fixed suitable for various analytical techniques * Reduced costs for tissue procurement * Technical support to design your studies utilizing human biospecimens * Letters of support and budgetary information for grant applications

Abbreviations: HTORR

Synonyms: Human Tissue Organ Resource for Research, Human Tissues and Organs for Research, Human Tissues and Organs for Research (HTOR), Human Tissues Organs for Research

Resource Type: biomaterial supply resource, material resource, tissue bank

Keywords: tissue, organ, nervous system, pulmonary system, cardiovascular system, endocrine system, eye, bone, cartilage, normal, diseased, human immunodeficiency virus, heart, kidney, lung, brain, liver, eye, bone, joint, disease, rare disease, endocrinology, eye bank, immunology, infectious disease, nephrology, nervous system, ophthalmology, pathology, pulmonary system, research, specimen, toxicology, transplantation, catalog

Related Condition: Normal, Disease, Human immunodeficiency virus, Rare disease

Funding: NIH Office of the Director U42 OD011158

Availability: Free, Freely available
