Description: We are an academic Core Facility that supports the applications of DNA Sequencing and Fragment Analysis of Microsatellites and AFLP's. Our Facility was founded in 2003 and expanded in 2005 with funds from NSF Instrumentation Development Grant (#0500993). In 2008 a generous gift from the Yale Provost allowed us to upgrade our Applied Biosystems Genetic Analyzer from a 48 to a 96-capillary. In 2010, with funds from NIH Equipment Grant (1S10RR025478-01) we upgraded additional equipment to ensure that we are an efficient throughput Core. We are housed in the Yale Institute for Biospheric Studies Molecular Systematics and Conservation Genetics Center both under the Direction of Dr. Adalgisa Caccone. The presence of our Core within this setting enhances training within the MSCG Center by allowing students to obtain genetic information from large data sets in a time frame that is appropriate to their academic schedules, and to do so within the budget available for training. Our services are utilized by over 600 users from Yale, other academic institutions and private companies from across the United States and around the world. By promoting access to our equipment we enhance cost effectiveness, reducing idle time and avoid wasting consumables. This in turn allows us to reduce rates and have our services available to users that could otherwise not afford it. While our user base continues to expand our focus remains the same: to offer high quality services at prices affordable to small and medium sized laboratories.
