Description: Interdisciplinary laboratory designed for study of human subjects. Lab resources are available to all Stanford GSB faculty and PhD students to support research that uses human participants, whether your focus is organizational behavior, behavioral marketing, political economics, or behavioral economics. Assists with research by programming study, posting study to one or more of the available subject pools, paying participants, running participants through experiments in the lab, or creating study materials. Engages with faculty members and doctoral students in preparing and carrying out human subjects research, both in-person laboratory experiments and online survey research. Provides expert consultation on behavioral experiments, and implementations of technology in behavioral research, such as eye-tracking, psychophysiology, and other specialized technology used in research with human subjects.
