Description: Recognizing the importance of research in Neuroscience and its great promise, as well as the importance of educating the neuroscientists of the future, the University of California, Davis, in 1990, established The Center for Neuroscience. The Center has now become the focus of interdisciplinary studies in Cellular, Molecular, Systems, Cognitive and Translational Neuroscience, with a Faculty made up of world leaders in brain research. The Center occupies facilities especially designed to promote and foster interactions among the resident faculty, associated faculty, postdoctoral fellows, and graduate students, with state-of-the-art lab space and associated facilities such as cellular and molecular imaging, functional imaging of the human brain and extensive databasing facilities. The Center provides an attractive setting for seminar series that feature distinguished National and International guest speakers as well as speakers from the UC Davis community of scientists. The Center is home to a number of visiting scholars each year and enjoys a lively intellectual atmosphere.
