Description: A non-profit collection of biological samples and detailed associated clinical data, designed to facilitate medical research into vitiligo, a devastating skin disease that is much neglected. They collect, store and analyze biological samples throughout the network of collaborators in 11 countries, using standard collection protocols and unified patient record, which are then made available to the scientific community and research organizations investigating pathogeneses, diagnostics, new treatments, and ultimately a cure for vitiligo. The core asset is a large collection of well-organized hair, blood, serum and DNA samples, integrated with comprehensive and anonymized patient records.
