Proper Citation: Neurogenetics and Behavior Center (RRID:SCR_002851)

Description: This center provides routine behavioral/cognitive testing of mice with phenotypes that are expressed as a consequence of alterations at the level of gene function, and that are relevant to basic neuroscience and to animal models of neurological and psychiatric disorders. Current Research Behavioral testing within the center involves a collaborative component in which mice provided by users are assessed for behavioral/cognitive functions. All research includes behavioral assessment of a variety of genetically altered mice provided by users. Services Provided The objective of the center is to provide a link between genetic and molecular analysis of neural function and the study of integrative systems and clinical conditions through behavioral assessment of animal models, and mouse behavioral phenotypes generated by genetic modification. Sponsors: This resource is supported by the National Center of Research Resources (Grant Number: P40 RR017688).
