Description: At the vanguard of veterinary education since William Dick founded the School in 1823, the Royal (Dick) School of Veterinary Studies is one of the world's most innovative and influential centers for clinical care and student education. Using outstanding clinical facilities, we provide veterinary services of the highest standards and a stimulating educational experience for our students, within an environment rich in high quality interdisciplinary research. Affectionately known as the "Dick Vet", the School is part of the College of Medicine and Veterinary Medicine at the University of Edinburgh, one of the top 15 centers of biomedical research in the world with annual research awards in excess of 100 million pounds. Our research spans all aspects of veterinary medicine, from molecules and genes through to animal and human populations. Our partnership with the Medical School is summed up in the ethos - One Health. Our vision is simple yet ambitious: we want to take the School's work to a new level as a world leader in veterinary research and training. By 2011 we will have invested over 100 million pounds in building state-of-the-art teaching facilities, clinics and laboratories. We attract, and actively recruit, the world's leading veterinary teachers, clinicians and researchers to maintain our customary high ranking in the UK league tables for international excellence in our teaching and research.
